I think, at times, of Shaw s epigram: Those who can, do: those who cannot, teach. If we could write poetry no doubt we would do so, and leave the teaching to others. If we only love poetry, but cannot write it, then we teach. Yes, but teaching is also doing, and it is because I have felt that in teaching poetry I was, in the fullest sense, doing, that I have found it so satisfying. Life s inadequate to joy, as the soul sees joy, says Cleon. Teach a poem, as it should be taught, and see the ?ash in your pupils eyes as the living beauty of the poem goes home to their hearts, and you will find that life is adequate to joy. Certainly, at the end Of a lesson on poetry, Shaw s epigram has seemed to me merely a clever futility. He never knew the teacher s joy in doing. But there is another reason for beginning with poetry. If I had to test a teacher of English by his work in any one branch of the subject I would choose this. It is the highest work he has to do, that which demands most of him. If he can teach poetry he can teach any other department of the subject if he will; but he may teach other departments Of the subject Well and fail with poetry.
