All of a preachers duties have reference primarily to Deity, since whatsoever he does must be done in the name of Uchrist. Nevertheless he is under direct obligation to God irrespective of his service to himself and his fellow-men. Piety should be cultivated, even though there were not another being in existence than self and God. SECTION I. Reverence. it seems a strange thing to say that a preachers office tends to promote irreverence. If he is not exceedingly devout he will find that familiarity with sacred things breeds carelessness. The true preacher should never lose that feeling of awe so eloquently described by Chrysostom on The Priesthood. 1. There Should be Reverence in Private Life. --His family worship should not be perfunctory service, but heart felt devotion. The preacher who fails to impress his own household with his consecration is unworthy of public confidence. It is painful to hear such a man offer thanks at table. While thinking of something else he is likely to address the Giver of all good as follows: Lord, bless this food for Christs sake, amen. Such a hurried, indifferent muttering betrays a heart untouched by the emotions of true gratitude. Doubtless the fathers lack of true reverence in the home is what hinders many a preachers child from being saved. Happy the preacher who can say, As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord 2. Reverence lu the..
