Excerpt from The Wisconsin Archeologist, Vol. 4: Milwaukee, Wis., October, 1904 Thus fragments of the same vessel are often found both on and at varying depths beneath the sandy surface. Some of the fragments of a pot restored by the writer, and at present in his cabinet, were obtained on top, while the remainder were recovered at a depth of four feet beneath the surface. Thus it may occur also that pieces of the same vessel may be found together on the surface, or separated from one another, sometimes by considerable distances. In several instances vessels have been found in position, surrounded by and filled with sand, but these quickly fell to pieces when an attempt was made to remove them. The sherds may be separated into two principal groups, according to the nature of the tempering material. In the first of these may be placed all of the pottery tempered with materials other than shell, and in the other the shell-tempered ware. The former predominates on every site mentioned in this contribution, while the latter occurs less frequently and in...
