Not illustrated. 1914 Excerpt: .And Pestilence had scarred the ground; Is there a place in God s creation Where more of ruin can be found? Oasis in a desert waste! And there this Moslem singer lies; But centuries on centuries haste To sing his songs with swimming eyes. Bring roses, pansies to his grave, And string again his rusty lyre; For he was gentle, true and brave, And burned with true Parnassian fire. DELILAH DELILAH! If you were a cannibal, And dwelt in Fiji, not in this fair town Where Chivalry respects no animal Beneath Avernus gentle hearts would drown, ROWENA You would not wear that guilt, bedizened crown, --That seraph s smile upon a Gorgon s face!--But on a spit, heels-hung, your skin would brown And frizzle with a shining gobbler s grace. We know, a few, why sweet Alexis chose To lie so still within the sea-wolves cave, Where basilisks his warm heart never froze And days were placid as lone Tahoe s wave. Life has its joys and Death its ghostly woes, But neath its wave no thorn nor viper grows. ROWENA SWEET little rose That on the meadow blows And frankincense distills That all our being thrills! You have no taint of earth, And from your very birth Some spirit of the air Lives in your face so fair. To-day you lay upon your bed; It seemed as if some seraph said: I am too delicate a flower To live except in some wild bower; AN...
