Not illustrated. 1609 Excerpt: .of a dog which had escaped from a laboratory, where he had been the subject of an experiment. The note is strengthen. ed by a hospital scene, in which an unnecessary operation is performed on a woman, a poor patient. The home of a celebrated surgeon is admirably sketched in, with the intellectual cynical head, the timid wife who abhors scientific cruelty but dreads protest against it, the daughter, proud and high spirited, regarding her father as a benefactor of his race. The story unfolds naturally and quietly, bringing in powerful arguments without effort, and appealing to the reason even more than to the heart. There is no exaggeration, no violent declamation, no abuse, and every crucial statement made is verified by an exact reference to medical books or journals; these references form an appendix, and a footnote, giving the reference, is added in every case....
