Thursday, December nineteenth. > DEGREES DEGREES DEGREES DEGREES DEGREESHIS day is never to be forgotten, so beautiful, so calm, M DEGREES DEGREES DEGREES so still with the earth and every branch and tree muffled A in deep, feathery, new-fallen snow. And all day the DEGREES DEGREESg DEGREES softest clouds have drifted lazily over the heaven shrouding the land here and there in veils of falling snow, while elsewhere or through the snow itself the sun shone. Golden shadows, dazzling peaks, fairy tracery of branches against the blue summer sea! It was a day to Live, --and work could be forgotten. So Rockwell and I explored the woods, at first reverently treading one path that the snow about us might still be undisturbed. But soon the cub in the boy broke out and he rolled in the deepest thickets, shook the trees down upon himself, lay still in the snow for me to cover him completely, washed his face till it was crimson, and wound up with a naked snow-bath. I photographed him standing thus in the deep snow at the water's edge with the mountains far off behind him. Then he dried himself at the roaring fire we'd made ready and felt like a new boy--if that can be imagined. We both sketched out-of-doors for a little while in the morning like young lady amateurs. I tried it again two or three times throughout the day with indifferent results; it was...
