The farmsteadings of the Scotch and Irish settlers are now protected from these by clearing a wide space all round of everything combustible. Buenos Ayres stands on a level plain about 90 ft. above the estuary; thence the country rises imperceptibly; till it attains a height of about 800 ft., and then continues level to the Andes. Under the surface soil everywhere there is a reddish indurated calcareous mud, passing into a hard marl, and fdld throughout with the bones and entire skeletons of extinct quadrupeds, some species of which were of gigantic size. Theso are all of the same type of animals as now inhabit the region--the edentate, such as the sloth, armadillo, cavy, capybara, and others; but the ? existing congeners are dwarfed in .A/ comparison. These remains are associated in many places with the remains of mollusca, all...
