No where should this appeal have a greater consideration than in the construction of school buildings. Here are housed hundreds of little children with neither the strength nor the experience to protect themselves in the face of such dangers as fires. The necessity for. Fireproof construction of schools is now generally recognized by School Boards and tax payers. There is no need to picture the horrors of a Collings wood calamity nor the long list of school fires occurring every year. The lessons of these disasters have been well learned by thinking people. The laws of many States now. Require fireproof construction throughout for schools of any size, and even in the smaller buildings fireproof corridors, stairs and boiler rooms. There is no doubt but that every section of the country will adopt similar laws in the near future. The cost of fireproof construction has been greatly reduced...
