Not illustrated. 1906 Excerpt: .several years; then, had they been painted with good stuff before rust appeared, and had this treatment been continued at regular intervals, we think that malleable iron would be in favour at Bradford still, for our own experience is that malleable iron is eminently satisfactory in manufacturing districts which must be similar to Bradford. After all, one does not have to use gun metal for poles, bases, collars, bracket arms, and flexible-suspension brackets because we cannot keep the steel or the cast iron rust free; why, then, should it be necessary for hangers? In the matter of local action, we can assure Mr. Blackburn that we have met with nothing but the exact opposite of his experience, and we even hesitated to exhibit specimens of decayed span wire because we felt that every one would take the action for granted. What prevents it at Bradford Mr....
