Government Accountability Office, 2004 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)57175387 Excerpt: . . . professional associations, businesses, research institutes, and others 5 interested in federal statistics. To obtain input from other federal agencies, the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) established an interagency advisory committee for the ACS in 2000. The committees major purpose was to coordinate the review of questions to be included in the ACS. Because of the committees limited focus, the Census Bureau established the ACS Federal Agency Information 6 Program in 2003, responding to a recommendation we made. This program is designed to assist each federal agency that has a current or potential use for ACS data to achieve a smooth transition to using the ACS. From its beginnings in the mid-1990s, the Census Bureaus development Outstanding Issues plan for the ACS was designed to ensure that the ACS would satisfactorily Jeopardize ACSs replace the Decennial Census long form as the major source of small geographic area data. In our review of the plan, we found that the Census Replacement of the Bureau, as well as key ACS stakeholders, had for many years identified the Long Form key issues that needed to be resolved if the ACS were to reach this goal. We have identified the following unresolved issues from our research (described in appendix I): the methodology to be used for deriving independent controls for population and housing characteristics with ACS definitions of place of residence and reference date, improvements needed to operational procedures, methods for valuation and presentation of dollar-denominated data items, comprehensive analysis of the comparability between new ACS data and corresponding data from the 2000 Census long-form and 2004...
