Excerpt from The International Institute of Agriculture, Its Labors in Behalf of Economic Betterment Nor is this all. An increase, such as that verified in 1910, of in production may fail to cause a fall in prices, if, in the meantime, consumption, especially the number and quality of consumers, has varied. It is known that since the beginning of this new century a gigantic revolution has been going on in the ratio between the production and consumption of wheat. Consumption is extending to countries which till now did not use wheat, and is extending to strata of the population which had hitherto been contented with inferior kinds of cereals. On the other hand some countries, such as the United States, no longer occupy their former position of great exporting countries, whilst others have entered the arena, such as Canada and Asiatic Russia, where the cost of production is different, and probably higher. To reduce all these variable and constantly changing phenomena to mathematical formulae to Single Numerical Statements, to spread this knowledge amongst the farmers, to be the great economic school-master and guide, this is the function the International Institute of Agriculture is to fulfil. After a laborious period of growth the Institute has at last landed on its feet, and from the way in which it has traversed the first difficult stages we are fully justified in expressing the belief that it will triumphantly pursue its path toward economic service to the very end.
