Now it is known, and the British Royal Commission on Accidents in Mines long ago drew special attention to the fact, that good light is an essential element of safety in mines and a protection against innumerable accidents which have resulted in the sacrifice of many lives. Does not, however, the use of this highly-inflammable fluid diminish the degree of safety of the lamps in which it is burnt, by the overheating which it brings about and the inflammable atmosphere which is formed within the lamp itself? (2) The Suppression of the Exclusive Monopoly of the Mucselser Safety-lamp.--Are there really other lamps...
