Excerpt from A Great 4-H Club Year: National Report, 1935 A steady increase in the sheep-club work was evident during 1935, resulting in the largest enrollment yet attained in this phase of livestock club work. The number of farm boys and girls enrolled as demonstrators in Sheep-club work totaled of whom reported having raised sheep. demonstrations conducted were practically the same as those in former years, the emphasis, for the most part, being placed on the use of purebred rams, culling flocks before the breeding season, winter care and management, improved housing and equipment, and the use of forage. A few demonstrations were conducted, as in former years, in the grading of wool for market. Sheep sheering, in some tates, was also emphasized. In this connection, the story of Clifford Gildner of Michigan is typical of the work being done. I rigged up a gas-engine outfit and sheared sheep this spring around our county. I enjoyed the work, the farmers got more wool, and the wool graded better. I was able to make some extra money at the time of year when we...
