Ian Shepherd Raj Joshi Publishing, United Kingdom, 2017. Hardback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. The year was 1893 and the night before Christmas Eve. On the country estate of Lord and Lady Harrington tradition dictated it was also the night of the annual Christmas Ball, given in thanks to the considerable workforce it took to run such a large estate. This story is about one of those workers, Drummond.No-one ever knew his full name. He was only ever referred to as Drummond. He stood six foot six with hands the size of tractor seats which belied his profession as a master-craftsman of such skill and expertise that any Carriage, Buggy or Sleigh that carried his mark would have been one of the finest in England and much sought after.But now, a broken fence, a faulty drive belt on a threshing machine or a cracked chimney stack, were the new employers of his skills. But, Drummond was content in his new role and the solitude it afforded him.He avoided socialising within the community of the estate and was quite happy to be left alone and get on with the work assigned to him by Stephan, the Estate manager. As his oldest friend, Stephan was one of the few people to know of Drummonds daily struggle coping with a sad and tragic past. It was during spring the following year that Stephan introduced Drummond to a young stable lad called William, who d been employed at the request of Lady Harrington. William was someone Stephan thought would be the perfect assistant to help ease Drummonds considerable workload for the forthcoming winter months.William was a young orphan boy, a stray, but who seemed to possess a rare and magical gift. Animals became calm in his presence and people felt at...
