Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Traditionally the human mind manages the interior life of thought, fantasy and passion. The brain observes and governs the exterior life of action in a world of matter in motion. The mind is aware of time and the brain is cognizant of space. Increasingly the brain assumes all these duties thinking to itself: The mind is nothing but a ghost in a machine. This brain may notice that this thought is in its native tongue. If an image accompanies this idea Je pense, donc je suis is probably not the one. What do the doctrines of materialism and dualism have in common? Neither privately ricochets around within a brain or publically reverberates through society by means of telepathy. Each is an idea about human existence burdened by concerns articulated in words. Both notions live in a linguistic reality with a vivid image of a bodily host. An image is the visual form an idea takes. An idea is the light that reveals the image. If the idea is not very bright the image is not very sharp. A brain might remind itself in its customary language: We do not examine the experience of an image or an idea, but the concepts image and idea and thus expressions employing words as Wittgenstein suggests (P I 383). With droll wit Brain transmits its thoughts in words not waves commanding Language: Picture this Outspoken One; the sun is like a pendulum swinging above the world as it turns. Language retorts, Hells bells Circuit Board! You have the simile backward. A pendulum resembles Old Sol swaying solstice to solstice as earth rolls round the sun. You don t say? Yes I do but do you get...
