BROWN ALUMNI MONTHLY, VOL. 77: OCTOBER, 1976 (CLASSIC REPRINT) (PAPERBACK)

Forgotten Books, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Brown Alumni Monthly, Vol. 77: October, 1976 Nostrand, is one who has bothered to teach writing in the discouraging seventies. And with good results. Since 1973, more than students at locations as disparate as a high school in Tempe, Arizona, and Carnegie-Mellon University have learned to express their thoughts on paper using a totally new method of writing instruction he devised with twelve years of research and the fruitful collaboration of four Brown graduate students and instructors in English. As an added dividend, the Van Nostrand writing course, being offered to larger numbers of Brown students each year, is teaching students to think as they grope for grammar and words. Indeed, to Professor Van Nostrand, Writing is thinking. The alarming thing about the decline in students ability to write, he says, is not that their grammar is weak or that they don't know how to construct a decent sentence. It is, rather, that they cannot string sentences together to form a coherent paragraph that completes a process of thought. The degeneration is in the quality of an idea and in the ability to convey it in writing, he insists. The affliction, which is characterized by rambling, lack of focus, writer confusion over what he is trying to say, and problems in organization, is becoming prevalent at prestige schools, including Brown. Van Nostrand calls it elite illiteracy. Harvard's professors, who have watched their course in basic English become practically a mini-department, and Stanford's administrators, whose last year saw only 24 percent of the 200 freshmen with the best high school English scores pass their English placement examination, could hardly disagree with the concept of elite...
