To the left of this magnificent reservoir, the plain is bordered by small hills strewn with an innumerable quantity of blocks of lava. Evidently these blocks of lava have not come here by themselves, and are, like those of Tarichea, vestiges of an ancient town. The only difference is that they are larger than those of Tarichee, and I am inclined to believe that this increased dimension denotes a higher antiquity. It seems to me impossible to question the identity of the spring enclosed within the stone reservoir, which I have just described, and now called the Ayn-elMedaouarah, (the circular fountain), with the spring mentioned by Josephus, and which he denominates the fountain of Capernaum. This...
