Angas--Personal Contributions in all. 4,000--An Impulse to Local Efforts--The Annual Meeting--A Pathetic Resolution-- A Rich Man with Dignity of Heart. Forty years ago the most densely inhabited suburbs of Adelaide were between the city and the Port. The populous towns to the south and east are the product of a later period, but Hindmarsh and Bowden were places where families of the laboring classes mostly congregated, and there was a large proportion of the poor. From his town residence at Prospect Hall, Mr. G. F. Angas had a clear view of this locality, and its claims as a field for missionary and philanthropic effort were thus brought distinctly under his notice. The result was that in 1865 he practically constituted himself into a local...
