The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars, But in ourselves, that we are underlings. Skakspeare. At dinner, the Duffs heard the news of Georges return. The tidings soon reached Mrs. Leslies room. Grace was vexed with herself for feeling how well she had done without George, . and how much she had enjoyed the quiet week she had passed, in spite of the anxiety and fatigue of a sick room. It crossed her mind that now there was an end to this and to her pleasant tfe-a-tete. t with the Wards; but the next moment she consoled herself with the idea that Georges raillery might make a diversion in favour of Fanny, respecting Mr. Guppy. You will now be all together again, my dear Grace, observed Mrs. Leslie, and Fanny quite well. I hope Bo, answered Grace; they talked of going to some Castle on Monday, if...
