Sorensen is an Associate Professor in Agricultural Economics and Sociology at Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College. boxes of seedless fruit. Slightly more than 13 million boxes moved in interstate trade channels in fresh form, and of this amount about 11 million boxes were seedless. The predominant grapefruit produced in Texas is the red type. It is quite similar to the Marsh pink seedless in Florida, except that the flesh is a deep red and the rind has a crimson blush. The Red type has been the core of production in the Texas effort to again assume a major role in U. S. Grapefruit production.
