This pathological state is marked by a striking general retardation in the growth of the body implicating the skeleton, the muscles and the organs, while permitting a relatively fair development of the brain. The material on which the present description is based consists of five cases of intestinal infantilism which I regard as typical and fully developed examples of this distinctive state. And in addition to these cases I have studied five others of shorter duration and subacute course, which I am disposed to consider as instances of intestinal infection capable of giving rise to pronounced infantilism when the former condition has persisted through many months. With the exception of two of the cases comprising these two groups, I owe to Dr. L. E. Holt the opportunity to study these patients.
