Excerpt from An Essay on the Indigenous Malarial Diseases of Wyoming Valley, Read, by Appointment, Before the Luzerne County Medical Society The duty was assigned me, at the last meeting of our Society, of opening a discussion to-day upon the subject of our Endemic Malarial Diseases. The time which has intervned between the last meeting and this has not only been brief, but it has been a period of unusual labor in my ordinary professional duties, and I have therefore had but little opportunity for investigating the subject of this discussion. The paper which I have now to present is but little more than some rough notes which I have jotted down at brief intervals, and amid frequent interruptions. I regret that I have not been able to give this subject the careful study, and the close, consecutive thought that a matter of so much interest and importance demands. I trust, however, that my own deficiencies will be more than compensated for by the other members who are expected to take part in this discussion. A trace of carbonic acid and a varying...
