Randy stood up on his hind legs and clapped his front feet together. He tried to whistle, but he only made a whooshing sound. A few others also stood up to clap their hooves or paws, but their parents made them sit back down. Why can t we clap? Randy asked his mother. We don t clap until the orchestra is finished, whispered his mother. But they stopped, said Randy. That was only the end of the first movement, said his mother. What s moo-ment ? asked Randy. In an orchestra, the music they play is sometimes divided into parts called movements , said his mother, quietly. How many moo-ments do they have today? asked Randy. Three, said his mother.
