Tunnels Caverns: Looking Back at Forty Years in Underground Construction Estimating (Paperback)

By Harry Hilton

Xlibris Corporation, United States, 2014. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Harry was born and raised in Dublin, Ireland. On finishing high school, he went to England and was hired as a Trainee Engineer by a large Civil Engineering Building contractor. Training initially was at the home office and included drafting, quantity take-off, and surveying basics. Following a year at the home office, he was assigned to a construction project as an Instrument Man, assisting the Project Engineer. In less than two years he was appointed Field Engineer and a year later was moved to rank of Superintendent. His first assignment in that capacity involved supervision of a large sewer installation in a suburb of London. That project included about three thousand feet of small diameter hand-mined tunnel. A succeeding project also included some tunnel work. In 1960 Harry immigrated, with his family, to Canada. His first job interview was with a Civil Engineering company. This company, McNamara Corporation, happened to have a tunneling division and from that point on, it became a life of tunneling for Harry, with a number of contractors, and then as a consultant. Harry took a...
