Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Sawdust a Romance of the Timberlands A strange object it looked, in truth, planted there in the midst of the Arcadian landscape - a great rectangular wooden building, not more ornamental to look at than a sort of magnified barn; bare, gaunt, hideously new and hideously naked - a monster with a body of wood and a soul of iron and steel. You would have said that it felt aware of its nakedness, and aware, too, of its general incongruity with its surroundings, with such sullen breadth did it fill its place, so ill-tempered was the expression of its wide-open jaws, those great wooden portals that were flung back for the first time to-day. Even the tall brick chimney, which had never yet smoked in earnest, seemed astonished to see the church tower so far below it, and to be squinting down inquiringly at the acres of bare Space which stretched to the right and to the left. They would not remain bare for long; soon piles of neatly ranged boards would cover the ground which had been gained by the clearing away of many a straw-thatched hut. Was it not already crossed and recrossed by the narrow iron rails that were to assist locomotion, and were not the electric lamp-posts all standing in order, like so many soldiers, prepared at the word of command to turn the darkest night into day? It would seem as though the heavens were propitious to the new undertaking, for the March sky had never been bluer than on the great afternoon, and never had the fragrant green valley, still streaked here and there with the white of unmelted snow, stretched itself...
