Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Roumania in Light Shadow Yesterday morning we awoke at Predeal, a little town in the Carpathians, just on the borderline between Hungary and Roumania. Bright sunshine greeted us. On looking eagerly out Of the car window I saw on the station platform a lively crowd Of peasants clad in gaily embroidered garments. Shepherds in tall pointed sheep skin caps and shaggy fur mantles made a striking picture, their grave demeanour an effective contrast to the anima tion of the dark-eyed girls with red ?owers in their plaited hair. Is it like this every day I queried, feeling as if we had front seats in a theatre. No, this is Easter, and everyone has a three-day holiday, was the reply. Later, as the train went along, we could see the hora, a slow, swaying round dance, in progress on all the village greens to the music of the Violin and ?ute. Small ferris wheels, made Of wood and looking perilously frail, were revolving with burdens of laughing swains and maidens. In front Of the little white cabarets, tables were set in the open air, where the Older villagers were sipping wine, smoking cigarettes and solemnly, silently surveying the dancers.
