Excerpt from The Florist and Horticultural Journal, Vol. 3: A Monthly Magazine of Horticulture, Agriculture, Botany, Agricultural Chemistry, Entomology, C It is generally acknowledged that England possesses no example of public gardens worthy of her intelligence and limitless resources, and that in this respect she has hitherto been greatly outstripped by her neighbor France. Of recent years the Royal Gardens at Kew have been greatly enlarged and vastly improved, and now certainly occupy the first place in Europe as botanical gardens. But although these are tastefully laid out, their artificial decorations hardly deserve the name when compared with such as are to be seen in France. The reason of this inferiority on the part of England is no doubt to be found in the fact, that while the government of France has been in the habit of undertaking the execution of great public works for the people, the English government leaves all such works to be executed by the people, or by private companies; and until Sir Joseph Paxton's happy idea of combining gardens with the Crystal Palace, no com...
