[...] If I did, my darling, it was very wrong, he replied, gravely, and showed a great want of trust in our Heavenly Father. I could not sleep for thinking of you, and wishing I were older, that I might really be able to help you. Poor little Cicely, he said, tenderly taking the sweet, earnest face between his hands. Poor little right hand-old before her time. You must not take up our cares, darling. Indeed, if we older people had more faith we should never fret or worry either, but, instead, cast all our cares upon the Lord who cares for us. What are you and father talking about? You are both so grave, said Rachel, as she came running up to them. Cicely looks just like that picture we have up in our room-St. somebody or other-I can't remember the name. Not[.].
