And the Baby Racer would propel Dave Dashaway into an exciting new adventure! Dave Dashaway was a young pilot in the exciting first years of aviation in the early twentieth century when most things that flew with a motor were biplanes. When his father, a noted balloonist, died a mean old skinflint named Silas Warner had been appointed his guardian. Despite Silas Warner s machinations, Dave s natural love for aeronautics won out, and he d already had adventures on his way to becoming a well-known pilot. Hiram Dobbs was Dave s friend. Together the two would have an even more exciting adventure with hydroplanes on the Great Lakes. It started with a fateful telegram. And then a plane was stolen! But the crooks were in a plot far bigger than just plane theft. Would the next landing for Dave Dashaway be a watery grave? Roy Rockwood, king of early boys adventures, delivers an exciting tale of early American aviation.
