The measure has found most earnest advocates. Because these advocates are, without exception we believe, men practically unacquainted with the present modes in vogue among deaf mute instructors is no conclusive argument that they are wrong. Neither is an isolated case or two of successful articulation conclusive evidence that they are right. The discussion has now culminated in what we have long desired to see, the establishment of a school, at Northampton, Mass, where the system is to be tried under the auspices of those who ardently believe in the practicability of teaching articulation. We need no further argument, but rather a comparison of results, not between Germany and America where the results are obtained in diverse languages, and translated into the exaggerated hyperboles of inexperienced visitors, but between Northampton and Hartford or New York, where pupils educated in the use of a common language can be brought face to face, in the presence of professional experts. Let the test be for mental development, and not for parrot utterances, and if that test prove the superiority of the German system over the American, we can assure the able Chairman-of the Massachusetts Board of State Charities, that no professional pride...
