The curtains blew like ghosts through open windows as Janelle wandered naked through the big house. It wasn't because the summer heat kept her from sleeping tonight, she just hadn't slept well since the last time Ethan had shared her bed. She took a deep breath, pausing briefly before the windows, staring into the darkness with Ethan's face before her. Ethan. She would never see him again, never feel his fingers gliding over her skin, never feel his weight upon her, never feel him kiss her again. Janelle wiped a tear from her cheek and walked to the kitchen, putting her empty glass in the sink. She was tired now, so very tired. Maybe she would be able to sleep after all. Tomorrow was another day, Janelle told herself as she laid across the bed she'd shared with Ethan for nearly six years. More than a year had passed since Ethan had been gone. Janelle was surprised when the date came and went, surprised she had survived that long without him. Surprised she had survived so long alone. And she...
