In the 5th century BCE, the Men of the Great Assembly came together to finalize the writings of the prophets and the Judaic canon, that which we know today as the Tanakh. For Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi received from the prophets. These three then transmitted the books to the Great Assembly. These books included the writings of Ezekiel, Daniel, Esther, and the Twelve Minor Prophets. Not only were these texts designed to fix and strengthen the Judaic traditions, but they were also guides to the future of the world based on the communications transmitted to these prophets of God via the archangels. From these texts we find the basis of the eschatology of Judaism, Christianity and Islam. Within the Tanakh, a curious and seldom understood stream of prophecy arises that is the basis of the prophetic visions of a future Mashiach, or anointed ones, who will bring the world into a golden age of peace, truth and altruistic lovingkindness. In these visions, Israel will become the center of a nation ruled by God from which the blessings will flow unto the world. These two olive trees which stand by the LORD of the entire earth have been the subject of much speculation, yet the mystery of who they truly are remains. Within the Christian Bible, compiled close to a thousand years after the Tanakh, these two anointed ones have become the two witnesses of the book of Revelation. Even though the book of Revelation takes over three hundred indirect quotes from twenty four of the canonized books of the Tanakh, including Isaiah, Ezekiel, Daniel and Psalms, it was included within the Christian canon and remains the central writings of the...
