

Lapping Water (Paperback)

By Dan Flore

Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Lapping water is a book caught in the undertow. Dan J. Flore III wrote these poems because had no other choice, he had to, to survive. Life was on fire, and he had to open the floodgates of these poems to try to get it under control. The emotions that came out immersed him in a riptide that left him gasping and will do the same to you when you read them. . .Lapping Water, presents the voice of that quiet, nature-attuned man who observes without judging his own changes and the changes of those closest to him. These are unassuming and personal poems that do not partake of the ironic, subversive, rootless postmodern, but instead look to romanticism, imagism, and even further back, to the timelessness and transparency of such emotive lyrical poets as Po Chu i and Tao Ch ien a thousand and more years ago - New York Times bestselling author-Pamela O Shaughnessy, Triggerfish Literary Review, Issue 10, November 2012. Poets like Flore, when we have the great fortune to cross their paths in verse - remind us...
