Excerpt from Bulletin of the Terrestrial Electric Observatory of Fernando Sanford, Palo Alto, California, Vol. 2: Summary of Observations on Earth Potential, Air Potential Gradients, and Earth-Currents; September 1923-December 1924 In Volume I of the bulletin of this observatory were published the results of a long series of measurements of what was believed to be a diurnal variation of the electric potential of the earth at this station, and a discussion in which the proposed explanation of this variation was found in an electrostatic induction by a negatively electrified sun and a negatively electrified moon upon the earth. The method by which this diurnal variation was detected was described, but owing to lack of space the possible causes of variation in a quadrant electrometer used as was the one in the investigation were not fully discussed. Since that time there have been a number of suggestions of other possible ways than the one suggested of accounting for the observed results, so that it seems proper to begin this report with a discussion of these possibilities. The arrangement of the electrometer and its...
