Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The-Romance of Empire Drugs: English Herbs, African Fruits, Australian Gums, Indian Roots, Canadian Beaver and New Zealand Whale, All Contribute to This Empire Tale In these days, when closer economic co-operation between the various units which go to make up the British Commonwealth of Nations is being advocated and the Imperial Parliaments are engaged in formulating plans for making the Empire more and more self-supporting, it is of interest to consider the position as regards the supply of those products which enter into the important field of medicine. The British Empire is committed to the abolition of war between nations, but there is one war which it must ceaselessly wage - the war against disease, and with its far-flung territories, widely divergent climates and peoples, it has to contend in one part or another with practically every ill to which the flesh is heir. In view of the extensive opportunities afforded them, it is not surprising, therefore, that in the past British medical workers have made an unsurpassed contribution to the conquest of disease. Such a medical service, however, calls for a...
