By 1860 it reached almost 25,000,000 feet. sThis represents the coal marketed from the company s property. The chief cause of increase after 1850 was through the trade of the Pennsylvania Coal Company (see below). the state s credit, amounting to $300,000, was also repaid, leaving the company free from debt. This condition was not to last long, however, as the railroad extensions of the fifties brought the funded debt up to $900,000,2 and in 1859 further extensions necessitated an issue of $600,000 coupon bonds. This represented the total indebtedness of the company at the end of the period. The profits to the stockholders during this period were also highly satisfactory. Notwithstanding the increase of capital stock to $7,500,000, the average dividends were almost as great at the end...
