Not illustrated. 1922 Excerpt: .that proper inspection can control this, even better than the present quarantine. When the Pennsylvania inspection service was a joke (we have real inspections now), we watched our stocks, destroyed suspicious material, and used all known preventions, not because of the fear of State or Federal authorities, but as a cold-blooded business proposition. The present quarantine, while burdensome, is in many respects still tolerable, since the public, as might have been expected, is paying the cost. Were the quarantine extended to include Tulips, Hyacinths, Narcissus, Crocus, etc., the result would be disastrous. It is our frank opinion that this material cannot be grown commercially in the United States. We ourselves have carried on experiments covering a period of some thirty-five years, in order to discover if it was feasible to grow this material here. Several attempts have been made to do it on a commercial scale, but without exception, every one of these attempts has finally failed. We have secured and examined the bulbs of all the jcommercial experiments to which our attention has ever been called and, in each instance, the reason for the failure was obvious. The bulbs were so decidedly inferior that they could not even rate as second class. There seems to be, under cover, another reason for the quarantine, to wit, the establishment of the industry in America. The bulb houses have no objection to this, provided that this establishment of the industry is not made at their expense. All the...
