Excerpt from The Process of Repair After Resection of the Intestine and Intestinal Suture The following experiments were performed chiefly for the purpose of studying the process of repair as exemplified by the peculiar conditions which surround a wound of the intestinal walls, but also with the hope of contributing something of interest, and, perhaps, of value, to the surgeons and investigators who are now-occupied with this interesting field of surgery. The operations upon animals were performed in the Physiological Laboratory of the Harvard Medical School. Strict asepsis was not attempted in all cases, partly because the tolerance of the peritoneum of dogs is so great that precautions are not necessary to secure prompt union of the bowel and abdominal walls, and partly because it was desired to observe the effects of localized inflammation upon the function of the sutured intestine. As a rule, the abdomen was shaved and scrubbed with a one per cent. Solution of carbolic acid, or a one to five thousand solution of bichloride. The animal was covered with towels wet in the bichloride solution, and the portion of abdominal wall left uncovered was sprinkled with powdered iodoform. Sponges were kept in a hot bichloride solution, and instruments in the carbolic solution. Females were usually selected for these experiments, as it would have been well-nigh impossible to keep an aseptic dressing upon this region of a male.
