We arrived at Santa about four o clock in the afternoon: it is a considerable town, with a large plaza and church, situated on a productive plain. It has an excellent port, which is visited by ships from Lima, for rice, sugar, and lard. Pigs and cattle are very plentiful. Not having yet broken my fast, I was quite ready for a dish which the governor provided for me, and finding I could get horses, I determined to travel all night to Viru, eighteen leagues off, and fourteen leagues from Truxillo. IBS RIVER OF SANTA. CHAPTER XXVI. Passage of the river--Viru--Moqua--Arrival at Truxillo--Its appearance--Situation and trade--Huanchaco. We left Santa about half-past five, on good horses, which the governor lent me out of his own stable. We proceeded through the valley by a narrow path, where the wild sugar and other canes, entangled with shrubs, so completely overhung the road, that we had to force our way through them for about a mile till we arrived at the river. It is similar to that of Barranca, but more dangerous, as the water is deeper. Here Indians constantly attend with horses to guide travellers across the rapids, keeping a horse on each side of them; the upper one to break the force of the current of the river, and the other to support the traveller s horse, in case it..
