Excerpt: . . . descending like a gown or skirt to the ankles. He also wears a long and rather pointed beard, according to the ancient custom of the Irish. The whole figure resembles some of those represented in the Nineveh sculptures. Strutt asserts, but does not state on what authority, that the chieftains robe was light pink. Behind their chief ride two mounted warriors, also armed with spears, and with the Ireland some years ago was the Jock-coat, often of frieze, a long great-coat, with sleeves, a hood or cape, and a broad belt which fastened it round the waist. It was worn by both sexes, and, for a time, became fashionable in the upper ranks, even as now the ancient Irish brooch is admitted to polite society, and the crimson cloak of the Claddagh is esteemed becoming. In addition to the various references already given, the..
