Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Edinburgh Review, or Critical Journal, Vol. 112: For July, 1860-October, 1860; To Be Continued Quarterly Once more after the lapse of three centuries, the world has witnessed another great discovery of the precious metals. The auriferous sands and rocks of California and Australia are as much superior, in richness and abundance, to those which rewarded the industry of the Spanish adventurers, as these latter were superior to all which had been previously known; and gold has now for eight years been pouring into Europe in an exuberant tide of wealth beyond all former experience. What then will be the result of these Californian and Australian discoveries? And how far will they resemble in their scope and influence their prototypes of the sixteenth century? These are questions which, in the presence of such facts, cannot but force themselves upon every thoughtful mind. But since the epoch of which we have spoken, since the day when the sparkling veins on the sides of Potosi attracted the eye of the Indian shepherd, - a mighty change has come upon the world. Society in all its constituents has been profoundly modified. Commerce has grown to dimensions of which the merchants of the sixteenth century could have formed no conception. The entire foreign trade of the greatest commercial nation then in existence, probably did not much exceed that which is now carried on in a single English or American port. The total tonnage of the united galleons which constituted the Spanish mercantile marine, only amounted a century later, as we are informed by Robertson, to tons, little more than the tonnage of the Great Eastern steam-ship. Some of the most...
