Here perhaps I may be required to give an account of the heresies of those whom I have just mentioned; i. e., Nestorius, Apollinaris, and Photinus. This, however, hath no connection with the subject of which I am now treating, for it is my object, not to trace the errors of each individual, but simply to adduce a few examples by which that assertion of Moses may be clearly illustrated; namely, that if any Master of the Church, and he a prophet, should attempt, in interpreting the writings of the prophets, to introduce any new doctrine into the Church of God, Divine Providence permitteth this for our trial. It may, however, be useful briefly to digress a little and explain the opinions of the afore-mentioned heretics, i. e., Photinus, Apollinaris, and Nestorius. This then is the heresy of Photinus. He saith...
