Also, in 124th U. S. 465, the law requiring engineers of railroads in Alabama to be first examined as to their qualifications and receive license before they can conduct railroad transportation, although such persons were engaged in carrying on interstate commerce. In discussing the law against color blindness, the Supreme Court of the United States uses the following language: It is conceded that the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce is plenary; that, as incident to it, Congress may legislate as to the qualifications, duties, and liabilities of employees and others on railway trains engaged in that commerce; and that such legislation will supercede any State action on the subject. But until such legislation is had, it is clearly within the competency of the States to provide against accidents on trains whilst within their limits. Indeed, it is...
