Excerpt from Charles Duncan McIver and His Educational Services, 1886-1906 Twenty years ago North Carolina was spending annually for public elementary schools, rural and city, for children. This small sum was divided among more than different schools and teachers. The physical equipment of these schools, including grounds and furniture and buildings, was somewhat less in value than The average length of the school term was only 60 days out of 365, and the teachers were paid annually hardly $80 each. At least two - thirds of these elementary teachers were men. The total amount paid for the supervision of all these schools, including the nine towns which then had separate systems of their own, was a little less than for the year; only about of this amount was paid the 96 county superintendents for their services. At that time not a single county superintendent devoted all his time to school supervision on account of the meager salary paid, while less than one fourth of all the teachers spent longer than three months out of each year in the school room. Considerably more than one - fourth of the white population in 1886 10 years of age and over was illiterate, while at least 70 per cent of the colored population of the same age was illiterate. There were more white female illiterates than white male illiterates. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
