A lot of people think they own the things on this planet, but they are wrong, because we are just visiting for a short time and then we are gone .Everything was here before we came here, and I hope that everything will be here after we are gone. --Billy Proctor Along British Columbia s remote central coast lives Billy Proctor, a fierce mainlander who has spent his entire life on the water. He became a commercial fisher-man at age seven, selling his daily catch to his mother, a respected fishmonger. As his operation grew, so did his respect and understanding for the fish--how, when, and where to catch the thriving runs of Pacific salmon, oolichan, and herring. Eventually Billy came to realize that his beloved fish were vanishing--some to near extinction--and he understood that it was time to take action. Originally published in 1998 and now a Canadian bestseller, Billy s stories convey his profound respect and admiration for the lands and waters that he has spent his lifetime working on and fighting for. Stories are what you need to hear--stories about people who have spent a lifetime living and working with nature. We owe a debt of thanks to Alexandra Morton, who vividly introduces us to this man, Billy Proctor. He has much to tell us with his life and words. --Robert Bateman.
