Barefoot Beatnik Publications, United States, 2013. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Eleven months after the armed takeover of Wounded Knee, South Dakota in 1973 by AIM (the American Indian Movement) to protest the government's failure to fulfill treaties with its Native American people, Washington State Federal Judge George Boldt handed down an historic decision favoring Treaty Fishing Rights. As a result old prejudices were quickly rekindled as many outraged non-Indigenous lifelong commercial fishermen lost their commercial fishing licenses, their boats, careers and ultimately their way of life. Other headlines at the time included President Nixon's resignation, the Arab Oil Embargo, the kidnapping of millionaire heiress Patti Hurst and the end of U.S. military involvement in Viet Nam. It was during this period of time in the Puget Sound region of Washington State that a no-nonsense Lummi Indian fisherman happened to notice both a surfboard and kayak setting atop an old make-shift motorhome parked on waterfront property belonging to the tribe. Paddling his dugout canoe closer to shore the older man asked one of his several sons to give the driver a message which he would quickly understand as not an option! My old man want to try out your kayak. He says you can use his canoe. A short time later while paddling alongside one another after the unexpected request, the trespasser is asked if he is capable of making a fiberglass repair on the tribe's 50-year-old dugout canoe. Having made a few surfboards himself the Californian was anxious to help out, yet fearful of botching the job. The following day, however, he manages to fix the leak while surrounded by a 4th of July crowd of War Canoe competitors from at least two dozen American and Canadian...
