In late 2015, Jeff Hopper looked in the mirror one morning and saw that something wasn't right. His Adam's apple was well out of place. On Christmas Eve, his doctor called to tell him that a large mass had been found in his neck and chest. The months that followed included visits with specialists and surgeons, chemotherapy and radiation, and eventually two radical surgeries to remove what was now known to be a liposarcoma in one of the body's most intricate regions. Through all this, the author continued to write and speak, with emphasis on what it means to be a patient in the hands of God. What he came to recognize with his wife and family is that God's provision--the way in which he gives us the things we need--repeatedly comes through the people he brings into our life. Whether you are a cancer patient, the friend of someone fighting cancer, or simply one who needs to see that God shows up in our toughest times, My Hundred Helpers offers encouragement and instruction as it teaches you to see people as those God uses to care for you.
