Excerpt from Thermal Expansion of Alpha and of Beta Brass Between 0 and 600 C, in Relation to the Mechanical Properties of Heterogeneous Brasses of the Muntz Metal Type Apparently there has been, hitherto, no investigation along this, line, either with. Brass or with other heterogeneous alloys. Some determinations have been made of the thermal expansion of brass of different compositions, particularly at ordinary temperatures. It was desired in this work to compare the thermal expansion of alpha and beta brass of compositions which are normally in equilibrium with each other at ordinary temperatures. In the case of the pure copper-zinc alloy, compositions such as those at a and b in Fig. 1 were chosen; in a slowly cooled alloy of any intermediate composition the concentrations of copper or zinc in the alpha and in the beta phases will be those given by these points. The preparation of homogeneous alloys of these compositions is not possible in general without appropriate heat treatment. The cast alpha brass must be annealed for some time at approximately 500 C and slowly cooled; the beta alloy may require to be quenched from above the transformation range and drawn to relieve stresses.
