Grand Crossing Coming of Age on Chicagos South Side During the Great Depression

By Jack McGuire

Dog Ear Publishing. Paperback. Condition: New. 208 pages. Dimensions: 8.5in. x 5.4in. x 0.8in. Kids, Cops and Catholics in Chicago Against the backdrop of the mid 1930s and the Great Depression, life goes on for the McGuire family. Protagonist Jack and his four siblings, their father-Chicago Police Detective Martin Mugsy McGuire-and mother, sweet-natured Kit, each cope with their hardscrabble existence. Jacks Roman Catholic upbringing. . . uncompromising as the cross of Christ. . . is pitted against emerging doubts about his faith, a growing aversion to his old mans dictum that he become a priest and his own dreams of a more glamorous future as a big band leader. Tag along with young Jack and his cohorts through the mischievous misadventures that color their lives. Meet the crazy quilt of characters in his Grand Crossing neighborhood - many first-generation European immigrants-who leave an indelible imprint on the 18-year-old Pvt. McGuire serving in Europe during WWII. And in a riveting you-are-there recounting of headlined exploits lauding his dads police career, discover why the father finally emerges a hero in his sons eyes. Jack McGuire launched his professional career as radioTV beat reporter for the Chicago bureau of Variety. As a press agent,...
