CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 470 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 1.2in. I OPENED THE closet door with a shaky hand. The wire hangers clinked together like wind chimes as a cold draft leaked through the windows. The duffel bag sat there on the bare closet floor, like a patient dog, like a body, like a crime. I felt something watching me, but when I turned around there was nothing but shadows, emptiness. I shifted my weight from foot to foot, thinking about Celia getting cold in the car. I shouldve done what she did, built a fire, burned this all away. In the end, I shouldered the duffel bag, the contents shifting and sighing. When I turned to go, that same shadow flickered across the window, then stood still. I approached, and the shadow twitched but stayed. Just beyond the glass, perched on the dead stalks of lavender sticking up out of the window box, was a hummingbird. I knew it was impossible it was the dead of winter, ten below, the middle of the night but there it was, glimmering green as an emerald in the moonlight. Once I was positive it was simply a trick of the light, it rose up, wings thrumming, tapped the glass once with its long beak before streaking away. Grandma I whispered to the dark. Celia watched me in the rearview mirror as I opened the trunk, stuffed the duffel bag inside, like a dead body. She didnt say a word as I came around, slunk inside, started the car. We grabbed gas station coffees and jelly donuts, filled up the tank, and headed out into the dark stillness. My official name-change documents were curled around my drivers license that still held my other name, the...
